It's easy, give it a try!

There were pigeons in flocks so large that when they settled for the night they filled many trees, and the limbs of the trees would crack and break with the heavy load. There were wild turkeys, wild geese and wild ducks. There were hundreds of bright little birds, called parakeets, flying through the woods and crying Skeet, skeet, skeet! in their loud, sharp voices. You would not see parakeets flying wild in our forests now; but long ago, when the great woods covered the land, there were many parakeets.

The great woods made a good home for wild animals. Deer walked under the trees and licked salt from the edges of the salt springs. Bears hunted for wild honey in hollow trees. Fierce wild hogs dug among the leaves to find nuts and roots for food.

Wild cats and panthers walked among the shadows of the great woods, looking for smaller animals to eat. A panther is a kind of large, fierce cat. It was one of the most dangerous animals in the great forest.

There were wolves, foxes, rabbits, squirrels, and many other animals. Thousands of snakes made their homes in the trees and the tall grasses of the river banks. There were no smooth, wide roads then on which people might travel. There were only rough, muddy paths, twisting in and out among the great trees...to be continued.
